Unlike many others in our sector, we believe in giving you autonomy to run an area on a day-to-day basis just as if it was your own business but with support always on hand. Part of the key to your success will be to build relationships with clients, customers, colleagues and contractors. Plus, have the comfort of knowing that you are working in an industry that produces the most carbon-friendly building product there is, and it's renewable as once a forest is felled it is replanted and the whole cycle starts again.

Working with our Harvesting Managers who buy trees, millions of them every year, you'll need a good business head to make sure you work closely together to offer our clients the very best service, and be able to learn the different options and the financial implications of them all.

You will build relationships with our established hauliers and harvesting contractors to plan how to best tackle each site to protect both the site and our people working on it, this will all be overseen by your Area manager who will be on hand to assist in all aspects of your day to day work. Then there's all the technology; harvesting machines that are programmed to cut the best from every tree, forwarders that know precisely where every felled tree is lying, specialised lorries which minimize their impact on the roads, mapping software on your laptop, your phone and on the screen of the harvesting machines all of which provides you with state of the art technology to assist you with industry leading contract supervision.
